Topic : “Acute Kidney Injury (AKI) and Beyond”

Summary : The incidence of Acute Kidney Injury (AKI) is increasing across the spectrum of both in community and hospitalized patients. Given the increased morbidity and mortality associated with AKI, significant research effort has been focused that leads to change in concepts in this field. These recent change in concepts includes standardizing AKI definitions and staging, its diagnosis especially with sensitive biomarkers, identifying risk factors, and newer aetiologies of AKI. In addition, a growing body of evidence demonstrates AKI is not a “self-limited” process, but is strongly linked to increased risk for chronic kidney disease, subsequent AKI, and future mortality. Apart from long term adverse outcome each episode of AKI is associated with considerable short-term mortality, morbidity and immunological dysfunction. In this coming CGR, Department of Nephrology would like to highlights, these recent conceptual change in field of AKI through case presentations.
